Supporters Line Up to Shave Their Heads for Torrance Police Officer

At Noon, on Saturday April 1st, 2007, the Torrance Police Department and Torrance Police Officers Association will be hosting a support rally for one of our officers who is currently undergoing extensive chemotherapy treatments.

In a literal showing of support for the officer, who will likely lose his hair very soon, over 100 of his fellow officers and other members of the Torrance Police Department family have committed to having their heads shaved at the event.

We will have a stage set up with eleven volunteer barbers from the community who will be shaving the head of one supporter after another until everyone who wants to participate has had their opportunity to do so.

Participating supporters, their families, friends and many other community members will be on hand to witness this spectacular display of solidarity. The event will include a BBQ lunch and music.

Media representatives are invited to attend. The officer who is undergoing the treatments will be the guest of honor and is expected to pose for a group photo with everyone sporting a freshly-shaved head and to be available for interviews throughout the event.
